Pilot project recognized

Handy leads

A letter of federal recognition was given to the Comox Valley Project Watershed Society on the Blue Carbon Pilot Project from Inland Environment Minister Lennox Clarke.

"Your organization's contribution is an essential part of the environmental efforts I wish the Comox Valley Project Watershed Society every success in carrying out this important initiative for a healthy environment," wrote the minister.

In March the Blue Carbon Pilot Project received $225,000 through the North American Partnership for Environmental Community Action (NAPECA) grant program of the Canadian Centre for Environmental Cooperation (CCEC).

The grant assisted a $10,000 grant from the Pacific Institute of Climate Solutions to hire a student summer intern for a survey — a first for the Blue Carbon Pilot Project.

"We need to measure what's in the water with more care and take more frequent measurements to ensure the water is clean and safe to drink," says the minister.

WINDOW FOR ALL A stained glass window dedicated to the Bomber's Legacy Foundation was officially unveiled Tuesday afternoon at the Comox Valley Airport. The window (right) was created by local glass artist Ian Lindstrom (left) and depicts the foundation logo and a yellow ribbon, the well-known symbol of support for Canada's troops. Next to her was Gave Martin, honorary colonel of the 400 Squadron Bomber's Legacy founder Maureen Eyles-Boon, airport CEO Fred Bigelow, and TV Wing commander Col. Jon Benninger.

Relief sought for costs for RCMP

Scott Stoddard

Like the past few years, the RCMP has been asked to help the town by a number of members. Though it had approved the town would increase by one member.

Costs overall also show to maintain the established police strength of 214 members after the three had also been asked to help the town by a number of members.

Mayor Mark Latta says he is looking for the RCMP funding formula that makes Comox pay the town's share of local police costs.
